

Rupert and the Sorcerer—36

The islands quickly vanish behind the travellers as the flying saucer streaks through the sky, and again there is nothing in sight but a waste of water, but the man keeps a straight course away from the sun until land appears, and at last the queer pointed house is below them. The Conjuror and Tigerlily come to see them alight, and the two men stand and look sternly at Rupert. "What is to be done to such a meddler?" says the Conjuror. "Surely the trouble he has caused deserves much punishment."

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

