

About Town

TWO men were returning from Adelaide very early one morning last week by car and, when about opposite the aerodrome, saw a strange light in the sky, which seemed to roll and perform other gyrations. They stopped and watched it. When they reported this next day, their work mates laughed at them and suggested they go to bed earlier at night. The two then rang "The Watch," who contacted the aerodrome and ascertained that it had been a meteorological balloon. The "weather boys" were quite pleased to hear the report, because they encourage people to be observant of what occurs in the sky, and so the two "star gazers" were able to justify their story.

TOWN Council has called tenders for the supply of Mount Schank metal. This is something which has not been done for many years and the outcome will be watched by many people in the town with a great deal of interest.

THERE have been some good stories about the ones which have got away at the Valley Lake, but one of the best concerns rowing a boat best concerns rowing a boat to a good spot to fish. Two men were on the lake and the man on the oars complained about the "heavy tub." His companion ridiculed this; he had rowed it plenty of times and never found it heavy. When they arrived at their "pitch," the oarsman was about to tie up, when he discovered that he had been dragging the pick across the lake.

KONGORONG grazier has a definite grudge against people who build new fences and leave the wire from the old fence lying on the roadside. On a recent wet day, he was driving sheep along a built up section of a road, when a car approached, and he had to hustle the sheep down an embankment. In his hurry, he did not notice some old wire lying on the roadside, and, tripping over it, finished up flat on his face in a few inches of water. He has been a firm advocate of cleaning up the sides of roads ever since.
