

Author vows he shook hands with space man

London, Wednesday

A book by an American who swears he met a flying saucer man from outer space is on the bookstalls today.

Writer-philosopher George Adamski says a space man stepped out of a saucer-shaped scoutship fresh from Venus and gave him a mysterious message for the people of the earth.

The space man was a friendly little fellow, he says.

For an hour they "talked" by telepathy about the universe, and he touched the space man's hand.

The space man touched down in the Californian desert, and Adamski says he took seven snaps of the saucer.

But the space man wouldn't let himself be photographed.

In a soft, musical voice he told Adamski he came from Venus, where they are disturbed about our atomic "booms."

discussed about our atomic "booms."

Adamski's account of this meeting and of another on December 13 — when his space man dropped a strange photograph and a symbolic message that experts have so far tried in vain to translate — takes up some 50 pages.

Adamski says the Venusian revealed: "People like us live on other planets. They visit the earth.

"They do not land in populated areas, because they fear violence. They believe in a creator."—Argus Service.
