

Flying saucer horror

The young couple on their honeymoon trip stood at the ship's rail looking into the night sky

"Mars is looking angry", said Phyllis. "I hope it's not an omen."

Then the thing that was not Mars became bigger and redder.

Another red pinpoint appeared; another, and another: bigger and bigger.

Five huge flying saucers like balls of saucers like balls of fire swept out of the sky and into the sea with great bursts of steam.

Catastrophe

From all over the world came reports of fireballs diving into the sea: but only where the sea was deepest.

What followed threatened the world with catastrophe.

Countless ships mysteriously disappeared

The navies of the world combined to attack this unknown terror. The losses were appalling.

Fantasy

Scientific fact and sheer fantasy combine in developing this amazing story.

It is The Things From The Deep, by John Wyndham, and it will appear in The Sun in five long instalments next week.

Watch The Sun on Monday for the first enthralling chapter.
