

The Quiet Stranger

ON a recent Sunday evening about 7.30 a flying saucer was seen over City Beach.

A woman reported to Civil Aviation that her observation had been substantiated by her 2 children.

She said the saucer made a couple of circuits over the sea, then headed off in the direction of Scarborough.

She described the phenomenon as "a large, round object like the photographs you see in magazines."

Woman appeared to be "quite rational" and "of good intelligence."

THOUGH I feel it cannot be regarded as generally true I liked the definition of "a Liberal" I heard the other day: A radical with a wife and family.

"WHY don't you learn to drive, you mug?" shouted one motorist to another after a near-accident in George-st. the other day.

But he soon pulled his head in. He had directed his remark to the bloke who'd taught him to drive a couple of years ago.

WELL at last I've found a decent, reasonably-priced place to eat in Perth—it's at the restaurant of a large city department store.

A good-looking young male Australian native asked me yesterday if I thought his blood would be accepted at the local Red Cross Blood Transfusion Centre.

Frankly, I don't know. I advised him to go along and find out.

FAMILIAR - LOOKING, bright red Govt. phone box in an unusual position is intriguing passers-by along a main suburban highway.

It's at the bottom of the backyard of a recently completed Maylands residence.

KIDS exploring the murky lower reaches of the Swan near Fremantle traffic bridge the other day made a rare find.

made a rare find.

They came across a bottle with "a message" in it.

With the assistance of a couple of equally-excited adults they finally managed to decipher the message.

It read: Pint and a half, please milkman.

I'D like to see more restaurants carrying the the sign in the window of one near the corner of Wellington and Barrack sts. It says in effect: If you think our kitchen is not clean come inside and see it for yourself
