

Without Passengers

That flying saucer which appeared over Traralgon last week was an atomic balloon released from Melbourne University (Atomic Physics). It travelled the distance in about three hours, quite a deal faster than the evening train, but it had no passengers.

Speaking at the Gippsland Shires and Boroughs Association conference on Friday, Sir Herbert Hyland said if petrol tax was refunded to the States on the basis of motor registration numbers, then Victoria would get 3½ times that which they are drawing today.
