

£1,000 . . . for

YOUR photo of Flying Saucer

They have seen one!

Increasing numbers of Victorians have, in the past few weeks, joined the ranks of those who claim to have seen flying saucers.

Mr. Smith
—I'll swear on oath.

They include practical,

down - to - earth locomotive drivers, hard-headed business-men and staid housewives.

What is it that they, and hundreds of others all over the world, have really seen?

This is probably the most fascinating speculation of our times, and to help solve the mystery. The Argus makes this offer:

We will pay £1,000 for the first authentic and reasonably clear photograph of a flying saucer taken anywhere in Victoria and produced to the Editor of this newspaper.

The negative must be handed in, and the picture must stand up to the most searching examination by photographic experts Whoever may take

Miss Brown
— It terrified me.

Mr. Oglesby 240ft. long

Mr. Beacon — Saw it for four minutes.

Miss Brown

such a picture must supply accurate details regarding times and location, and should be able to describe as closely as possible weather and sky conditions operating at the time, apparent height of the object, direction of flight, and its color, light pattern, and apparent method of propulsion.

The only condition attached to this offer is that the Editor's ruling as to what can be accepted as authentic must be absolutely final. Rights in the photographs will belong to The Argus.

So tell us all you can. And GET that picture. It may be worth £1,000 to you.
