OSLO, Wednesday: North Norway police have decided that the flying saucer — plus dark-haired occupant — which two sisters claimed to have seen in a blueberry wood must have been just a beautiful dream.

The two sisters were picking blueberries, they said, when they came across the flying saucer parked in a grassy dell in the hills above Mosjoen, North Norway.

There, too, was the dark stranger.

They politely offered him a bucketful of blueberries. He refused them equally politely, leapt into his saucer and whizzed off.

Today three policemen plodded into the hills accompanied by the sisters and surveyed the scene of this brief encounter.

And while the police could not think for a moment that the sisters were lying (their story told by each separately hung together too well for that) they could find no sign either that the spot had been in recent use as a saucer-park.

A male cousin of the sisters told the police that the sisters before the incident had been regarding and discussing books by D. Leslie and G. Adamski called "Flying Saucers have Landed."—AAP.
