

Dogs kept the saucers away

LONDON, Mon. — Two coachloads of people in a windswept Wiltshire field today tried to call up a flying saucer by telepathy.

But they went home when no saucer appeared after hours of waiting.

London lecturer Foster Forbes, who arranged the trip, said:

"Not disappointed"

"Flying saucers appear to have a tremendous telepathic range.

"We hoped one of them might pick up our thought vibrations."

"But I am not disappointed.

"I think if further experiments are held on the same lines we will get same lines we will get somewhere."

One of the spiritualists in the party, Mr. George King, said he managed to get into telepathic communication with Venus.

A dozen people said they saw King go into a trance while these words came from his lips:

"You'd be too frightened if we came today.

"There's too much difference of opinion here."

Atom fear

King said later that the Venusians wanted to help earth because they were frightened of the damage human beings might cause with atomic research.

The party, numbering 70, held their meeting near the ruins of a Stone Age temple.

One disappointed woman member said:

"Of course a flying saucer did not come.

"If some people will

“If some people will bring their dogs how can we possibly project our thoughts into space?”

“Just think what harm a few yapping dogs do to such an experiment.”
