

New Serial:

“Prisoner
On The Moon”

In these days of flying saucer rumors and scientific investigation into the possibility of interplanetary travel, public interest in the realms of space is avid.

Trips to the moon and to Mars before the 20th century ends are regarded as more than a possibility, but until scientists have perfected the first space ship would-be trippers around the universe can only read about it.

Science fiction, however, has far out-stripped fact. Imaginative writers already have conquered all the planets and made them holiday resorts for Earthmen.

The latest thriller of this popular type, “Prisoner on the Moon,” commences

THE MOON, commences publication in "The Newcastle Sun" next Monday. Written by the well-known British author, Robert Chapman, it is really different. An earth-dweller dead 100 years is brought to life and taken to the moon by scientists. There his adventures are many and varied.

Watch for the first exciting episode of this unusual story in next Monday's "Newcastle Sun."
