N.Z. FEARS INVASIONS

By radiophone from Auckland

Mystery explosions over Hamilton (North Island) have created a flying saucer panic.

People are clamoring for government explanation of widespread findings of mystery metals and jelly-like substances.

Reliable citizens claim they saw flying saucers, and several experts in responsible positions are talking of early invasions from outer space.

Among these are Dr. Bernard Finch and Harold H. Fulton, chief of the Civilian Saucer Investigation (NZ).

Fulton, attached to the RNZAF engineering section at Whenuapai base, Auckland, said today recent mass sightings in NZ emphasised the imminence of invasion from another planet.

Scientists and police, he said to The Sun today, had not explained the mysteries.

Mystery metals

Mass sightings have been recorded in the last month and strange jelly-like substances and unknown metals have been found.

The experts who predict early invasion of the earth believe the first landing ground for space ships will be Australia.

Fulton said, "A big fall of mystery jelly-like substances followed a saucer-sighting over Hawkes Bay.

"Government scientists have put the substances through every known test without identifying them.

"These substances, sometimes like a spider-web, last only 24 hours, then disintegrate."

He added, "Just the other day there was a sighting over Hamilton, followed by an explosion.

"Police confiscated a strange cylinder.

"So far the metal in the cylinder has completely baffled police and scientists.

"And police have not yet officially explained the explosion — which appears to have been in mid-air."

Fulton said an unknown metal with burn marks around its edges, has been found in the Auckland suburb of Orange.
