

Flying object explained

An unidentified flying object reported above Canberra last night was an aircraft flying to assist calibration tests of the Honey-suckle Creek tracking station.

The control tower at the Canberra Airport and the Canberra Times were inundated with telephone calls from people who reported an unidentified flying object above the city.

The aircraft displays a white light to make it visible to technicians on the ground. It will be operating for the next two nights.