

UNsung HEROINE.

On September 6, Miss Poisy Tava, nutritionist-educator for the Western Highlands Province, was disturbed by a commotion not far from her Mt Hagen home. Following heavy rain a child had become trapped in a storm-water drain. The unconscious youngster was dragged from the water. No discernible heartbeat and no sign of breathing. Miss Tava immediately administered mouth-to-mouth resuscitation and heart massage. The child's breathing was restored and the heart resumed beating. Miss Tava returned home and forgot about the drama. However, a friend didn't and told us about it. Miss Tava is to be commended.

BAGARAP! A Sydney Morning Herald

ney Morning Herald columnist reports that the crew of a Western airliner staying at a Moscow hotel decided to see if their first floor suite was "bugged". They searched the suite carefully and weren't a bit suprised to discover a black box under the carpet. They unscrewed the box and tinkered around with a circular device inside. It didn't appear to be a listening device so they replaced the pieces and rolled back the carpet. Shortly afterwards they went downstairs. There, among a circle of shocked reception staff, was the wreckage of a large chandelier.

★
DURING the past few days there have been umpteen reports from Lao, Goroka, Hagen and Madang about unidentified

... unidentified flying objects. The most plausible explanation is that people
are seeing Venus, now
visible late in the afternoon.
— P. ENGEE

