From TERESA POOLE
in Beijing

AT A MILITARY industrial compound in western Beijing, the soldier at the gate stood with his bayonet at the ready. Such weaponry would have been of little use against the woman from Jupiter who recently hijacked a Chinese farmer into her spaceship and repeatedly had her wicked way with him, but for a mere terrestrial it was good enough reason to wait patiently for admission to see Wang Changting, chairman of the Committee of Directors of the China UFO Research Society.

The society, with 3000 members, is China's only state-sanctioned organisation investigating unidentified flying objects and unidentified flying objects and possible contacts with extra-terrestrials. As for mysteries closer to home, such as why the society is currently based within a compound owned by the military, Mr Wang was disarmingly vague. The society, he declared, was an "independent, unofficial, civil, academic body". It was simply "through private connections" that its headquarters were temporarily housed in the Military Weapons Industry Academic Department of the state China North Industries Group.

Over the next couple of hours, with the help of photographs and videos, Mr Wang demonstrated that there were more urgent questions to answer. How to explain, for instance, the strange visitation recently in Guizhou province, which sheared off a field of pine trees? Or the large, dark, cylindrical spaceship that materialised during Chinese Air Force training exercises in June 1982, and wiped out all communications equipment?

Since its creation in 1980, the society has collected details of more than 5,000 UFO sightings in Chinese airspace. Investigation teams are despatched to assess the most startling reports. Mr Wang said, "We also study the application of UFO phenomena to the national economy... such as new materials and new technolo new materials and new technologies."

Mr Wang, a founder member, whose degree is in architecture, usually leaves the fieldwork to his colleague, Chen Yanchun, who holds an MSc in aerodynamics from the Beijing Aviation and Space University. It was Mr Chen who last October conducted an exhaustive seven hours of interviews with Meng Zhaoguo, the worker at the Red Flag Tree Farm in the north-eastern province of Heilongjiang, about his close encounters of an intimate kind with the insatiable creature from Jupiter.

On June 7, a large white object landed on the tree farm. Two days later, when workers went to investigate, Mr Meng was struck down by a strong beam of light. As his companions carried him to a nearby shed, Mr Meng screamed at the sight of a tall, humanoid monster, standing by a tree. His friends thought him mad and put him on a timber wagon, where the female E'T forced herself upon him.

Then on July 17, in the small hours, the sleeping Mr Meng disappeared from his locked house, transported by an alien force to the spaceship. The lady from Jupiter showed him pictures of her home planet, before once again taking full sexual advantage of taking full sexual advantage of him. "Mr Meng said the first time he was forced to have sex he felt pain. The second time he felt much better because he just submitted," explained Mr Chen.

The UFO Research Society cites the Heilongjiang case as the strongest example of possible direct contact with an extra-terrestrial. "As for the sexual contact, since this is done in private, it is impossible to confirm," said Mr Chen. In his opinion, however, Mr Meng was telling the truth. "I had a similar feeling to what Mr Meng described when I had my appendix out and they used a appendix out and they used a catheter," he said.

Until the visit from Jupiter, the 1982 Air Force incident was regarded as the most convincing evidence of a visiting spaceship. Surely, in those Cold War days, it could have been the work of the Soviets or the Americans? "No, no, no," insisted Mr Chen. "They do not have such advanced equipment."

Another key case occurred in Guizhou province at 3am on December 1, when farmers were woken by a roaring sound and bright lights. At dawn they discovered an area of forest where the sturdiest trees had been snapped about three metres from the ground, but telephone poles left untouched. On a nearby building, iron roofing sheets had disappeared, but the clay tiles had been left intact. A piece of severed tree-trunk is now stored behind Mr Wang's office door. Could it not have been a tornado? "No, no, no," said Mr Chen, citing meteorologists.

What of the personal testimony of these two UFO experts? "When I was 10 years old, I saw a cigarette-shaped flying saucer," said Mr Wang. How many UFOs has Mr Chen seen? "None." Is he disappointed? "Yes."

As luck would have it, he was

AS LUCK WOULD HAVE IT, HE WAS off investigating the Heilongjiang case at a time when it was difficult to avoid UFOs in the skies above Beijing. Around October 5 there were 26 sightings, including one man in the Nankou Locomotive Vehicle Factory who said he had seen five shining flying saucers in a V-formation.
