The Piri Reis Map

Piri Reis was a famous Turkish admiral in the sixteenth century who had a passionate interest in his collection of old maps. Using his collection of antique charts, Admiral Piri Reis compiled a world map in 1513. In 1929, a group of historians, poking around in the harem section of the Palace of Topkapi in Constantinople, found the Piri Reis map in a pile of rubble. These scholars were astonished to discover that the map showed the coastal outlines of South and North America. It also included precise data on the southern polar continent, Antarctica, supposedly not discovered until 1818.

Arlington T. Malleray, an authority on ancient maps, eventually came into pos-ancient maps, eventually came into possession of these documents. He was puzzled to find that the geographical data on the map was not in the correct position. Assisted by the U.S. Navy Hydrographic Bureau, Mallerey made a grid and transferred the Piri Reis map onto a globe. The map was totally accurate.

Later, studies revealed that the originals of the Piri Reis charts may have been aerial pictures snapped at a great height. The rivers, mountain ranges, islands, deserts, and plateaus, were drawn with unusual accuracy. As an example, Greenland was represented as being two separate islands. This was confirmed just recently by a French polar expedition; their seismic soundings beneath the surface indicated ice covers the space between the two islands.

The position of the map viewpoint is directly above the location of the Egyptian Pyramids. How did this knowledge exist in 1513, long before the first aeroplane flew, to our knowledge? Much evidence suggests things have not always been as we have believed them to be. The Uniformitarian idea of evolution of DNA has been shown to be bunk... The same insight should be applied to the evolution of civilization.

Catastrophism in civilization

"Gurkha, flying in his swift and powerful Vimana, hurled against the three cities of the Vrishnis and Andhakas a single projectile charged with all the power of the universe. An incandescent column of smoke and fire, as brilliant as ten thousand suns, rose in all its splendour. It was the unknown weapon, the iron thunderbolt, a gigantic messenger of death which reduced to ashes the entire race of Vrishnis and Andhakas.

The corpses were so burnt they were no longer recognizable. Hair and nails fell out. Pottery broke without cause... Foodstuffs were poisoned. The escape, the warriors threw themselves in streams to wash themselves and their equipment."

Sound like an account of Hiroshima? Its actually from an ancient Indian epic, The Mahabharata. The account of a nuclear weapon, its effects and the effects of fall-out, and even the way to survive the attack, are very accurate. And yet this is knowledge from thousands of years ago.

Ancient Technologies

Perhaps our past involved a higher technological state than we have achieved so far. The ancient world offers much unex-

lar. The ancient world offers many unexplained phenomena, which all suggests that once, there existed a technologically advanced society. Something happened, possibly a great war, maybe a natural disaster, maybe even a change to the environment produced by a society which refused to act responsibly, reducing the civilization to a few scattered remnants, who expanded to every corner of the globe. The ancestry of nearly every civilization suggests this. A fragmented tapestry can be woven, reconstructing the past from the legends of Ireland, South America, Easter Island, Egypt, India, China... There is a common thread. It has

Ancient Remnants

What remnants of the past could have survived these millennia? In an Indian village in the mountains, there exists an iron pole of such purity, that although it is over a thousand years old, there is no corrosion. In a Turkish antiques shop in the early 1900's, a European engineer bought what was described as a "religious artifact", which he discovered was an ancient battery. Recovered from the wreckage of an ancient Grecian trireme was the corroded remains of a machine which, once reconstructed by scientists, modelled accurately the orbits of all 9 planets. But the majority of this civilization seems to have been destroyed, either in the cataclysm that was their destruction, or in the more gradual processes of time since.

Is it a coincidence that the the mathematical system of both ancient Sumer and Egypt was based on 12, when in a film allegedly of the autopsy of an alien by a tingered sky Kachina in the tradition of the Laguna, Hopi and other Pueblo Indians. The Brazilian Ugha Mongulala believe their "Ancient Fathers", who came from the stars, had "six fingers and six toes as signs of their divine origin". Possibly the ancient civilization consisted of another race, and upon their cataclysmic demise, the way was opened for us to gain some fragments of their technology, and form our own civilization.

Harmonic 695

A New Zealand airforce pilot, Bruce Leonard Cathie, produced a book, Harmonic 695, which detailed his discovery of a grid system which covered the earth according to mathematical formulas he described. The evidence for this evidence for this was the sites of UFO sightings, which occurred upon grid points <<http://www.nor.com.au/users/stingray/bcathie1.htm>>

"The basic grid structure was formed by a series of great circles interlocking at various points around the earth's surface" he deduced after detailed calculations and research. The locations of ancient megalithic structures such as the Pyramids, Stonehenge and so on are related to what the Ancients believed were lines of power in the Earth, known as "ley lines" to the Celts.

Earth, known as "ley lines" to the Celts. Is Cathie's grid a modern expression of ancient knowledge?

Tesla, the forgotten genius

Nikola Tesla was born precisely at midnight on July 9, 1856, in the village of Smiljan, in the province of Lika, Austria-Hungary. He is regarded as a genius who ushered in the current electrical age. Among many other projects, Tesla experimented with actual wireless transmission of electrical power. In Colorado Springs, Colorado, he built a laboratory to develop this. The Colorado Springs lab contained the largest Tesla Coil ever built, even today. Called the 'Magnifying Transmitter', it was capable of generating some 300,000 watts of power, and (reportedly) could produce a bolt of lightning 130 feet long. According to local accounts, Tesla actually managed to successfully transmit about 30 to 50 thousand watts of power without wires using the 'Transmitter'.

Telluric Currents

The transferral of information through the body of the earth has since been achieved through seismic methods, but telluric currents are measured now by geoscientists, and the effects of earth movements upon them is determined. The electric transmissal of information

The electric transmissal of information through telluric currents has yet to be attempted, at least to public knowledge. For example, the changes in telluric currents which occur due to stress induced along the San Andreas fault in California are well documented <<http://erp.er.usgs.gov/reports/g1357.htm>>. What is implied in various publications is that the cause and effect may not be entirely one way. It has been shown that changes in the telluric currents can be caused by stress in the earth... Could stress in the earth be caused by changes in the telluric currents? By strategically locating Tesla coils, localised fields could be generated within the Earth. Have you noticed the proliferation of mobile phone repeater stations?

Only through experimentation will these effects be found, and the public sector is not interested in these effects. The private sector is quite active in this research... But you won't hear about the results. Or that the experiments are taking place... Various corporations with vested interests in our ignorance will make sure of that.
