

Double take: Has Google Maps captured a UFO hovering over Millers Point in inner Sydney?

UFO flies in for the summer

THE truth isn't only out there — apparently it's hovering right over Sydney.

Shocked Daily Telegraph reader Steve Jolliffe spotted what appears to be a flying saucer above Millers Point while using Google Maps.

"I live in the street on the corner and it has a beautiful view of the Harbour. I was just trying to get a look on Google when I saw it," Mr Jolliffe said. "I thought it was a UFO straight away."

Photographic experts who examined the shot said it could be a distortion but a Google spokesman joked: "The interplanetary internet project is clearly gaining momentum quicker than we thought."

"As with human-owned vehicles in Google street view, the licence plates are not identifiable."

Recently Apollo 14 astronaut Edgar Mitchell — co-holder of the record for longest-ever moon walk — caused a storm when he insisted extra-terrestrials had paid repeated visits to Earth but they were kept secret by government agencies.
