Signals out of this world

A German UFO expert says a NASA spacecraft may have been hijacked by aliens now attempting to contact Earth.

Hartwig Hausdorf claims Voyager 2, an unmanned interplanetary probe blasted into space 33 years ago, has started transmitting strange and unintelligible signals.

NASA installed music and greetings in 55 languages in case intelligent extraterrestrial life ever found it.

The UFOs - They Are Still Flying author said the probe began sending back distorted messages last month from near the edge of the solar system that NASA scientists were unable to decode.

"It seems almost as if someone had reprogrammed or hijacked the probe," Hausdorf said.

The signal from Voyager 2, which takes 13 hours to reach Earth, broke off on April 22.

NASA said engineers were fixing a data transmission fault.
