See 'flying saucers' in Leicester CJT

STARTLING images claimed to be proof of alien UFOs will be shown to members of the public at the National Space Centre later this month.

Hundreds of the objects have been captured on film by the Solar and Heliospheric Observatory (Soho) – a spacecraft located one million miles from Earth observing the sun.

The glowing, saucer-shaped "craft" were apparently moving in a way that suggested intelligent control.

Nasa has dismissed the images as being the result of a camera fault, and will not now comment on them. But UFO investigators are convinced they are alien spacecraft.

Mike Murray, 54, a founder of the UFO group Euroseti, which is holding the exhibition at the National Space Centre in Leicester, said, "Some of the pictures are real crackers. They are the archetypal flying saucers – disc-shaped objects with some kind of glow around them. Many have a pulsing light and leave a trail behind them.

"There's one which is really fabulous. It is a glowing disc with a pink disc-shaped object within the glow, and a turret on the top."

The images will be screened at the National Space Centre on the evenings of January 24, 25 and 26.
