

HARVARD PROFESSOR'S SHOCKING CLAIM:

By JACK ALEXANDER / Weekly World News

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Dr. John Mack was a well respected Harvard University psychiatry professor until he began talking about treating patients who've had sex with space aliens.

Now he is considered a quack by many of his high-brow colleagues who want to kick him out of the prestigious Ivy League school.

"I've known John since the 1950s. He's a brilliant fellow who occasionally loses it, and this time he's lost it big time," said Dr. Paul R. McHugh, director of the department of psychiatry and behavioral sciences at Johns Hopkins Hospital.

"John is saying there are people who have been abducted by aliens and need treatment for it, and that is just outrageous," Dr. McHugh added.

Before he began talking about space aliens, Dr. Mack was a respected Pulitzer prize-winning professor at Harvard Medical School, who founded the psychiatry department at Cambridge Hospital, one of Harvard's teaching facilities.

But some of Dr. Mack's Harvard cronies wondered if he had lost his marbles after he appeared on the Oprah Winfrey Show, Lorry King Live and other talk shows last year to promote his book, Abduction: Human Encounters With Aliens.

The book's 13 case studies included Ed, who remembers an alien woman taking a sperm sample from him when he was in high school; Jerry, who says she gave birth to a human-alien hybrid; and Peter, who tells Mack he had an alien wife in a parallel universe.

It may have been the "talk show" publicity that inspired the Harvard Medical Committee to investigate whether Dr. Mack's alien abduction research meets the school's standards for scholarship.

They could applaud his alien research work or boot him out of school. Dean

Will his crusade for the truth cost him his job?

Daniel Tosteson will make the decision based on the probe.

"History hasn't been kind to those who have unorthodox ideas," said attorney Roderick MacLeish, who represents Dr. Mack. "That's the whole point of having a free and open academic community. That's the whole purpose of tenure."

MacLeish says the medical committee's action violates the principle of the tenure system, which gives professors jobs for life so they can feel free to pursue radical or unpopular research.

Dr. Mack, 65, told the Associated Press last year that he doesn't necessarily believe in space aliens. But he can understand why his colleagues could find his work troubling.

"We don't have room in our culture for this," he said. "It's the elite people, my colleagues, who decide what we're supposed to believe, and to them this isn't supposed to be."

A source close to the case, who didn't want to be identified, said that the down-to-earth medical professors feel threatened by Dr. Mack's "other world" research.

"Dr. Mack is right, it undercuts a lot of the work of people over there," he said. "These people don't think anything is true unless they've got a controlled study with rats."

PULITZER PRIZE-WINNING professor, Dr. John Mack, has put his career on the line because of his shocking new book, Abduction: Human Encounters With Aliens.

People really do have sex with space aliens!

TYRANNOSAURUS CHICKS!

The dinosaur was no big deal, scientists say: Most of the prehistoric reptiles were the size of chickens.