

An aerial photograph of a large, circular crater on Mars. The crater has a prominent central peak and is surrounded by a low, raised rim. The interior of the crater is relatively flat and sandy, with some smaller, secondary peaks and ridges. The surrounding terrain is rugged and hilly, with various geological features visible. The overall color palette is a range of browns and tans, typical of the Martian surface.

Served as main communications relay for data sent home by Mars rovers Spirit, Opportunity and Phoenix lander