

The Alpha Magnetic Spectrometer (AMS) is mounted externally on the International Space Station and is designed to study high-energy particles - or cosmic rays. It uses a 0.15 T cylindrical magnet to sort incoming particles according to their momentum and charge.