Astronaut Gordon Cooper & UFOs - Continued

I asked him if he ever saw anything other-worldly while he was in space. "Nothing," he said. Did the other astronauts, any of them, see anything? "I don't think so," he said. How about on the moon? Anything at all? "Nothing on the moon."

Researchers in this field are sure that someone in government knows a lot more than they're saying. He agreed. "So how can we get the truth to come out?" I asked. "I think that's pretty much up to THEM -- the aliens," he said. "They seem to show themselves when and where and to whom they want. I wish they would pick some people who really want to meet them, instead of a couple of fishermen in Pascagoula, Mississippi" -- referring to the famous 1973 abduction of Charles Hickson and Calvin Parker.

"Would you want to meet them, Gordon?" I asked. "Heck yes," he said. "I'd give them a good welcome."

I don't think we have to wait for the aliens to begin discussing the truth about what is known. Doesn't the government already have lots of information? What about Roswell, I asked.

"Well, I'm pretty sure something was picked up at Roswell."

What about bodies?

"Maybe, yes. But I think there were better ones than Roswell," he said. "We got some live ones."

Live ones? Live aliens? Of course one hears all the rumors and wild tales. Was Gordon certain that there were live aliens?

"I knew a guy who brought one in," he said.

What? Brought one in? What did that mean, exactly?

It was back in the mid-1950s, at White Sands Proving Ground in the middle of the New Mexico desert. His friend Moser had who passed away a few years ago -- was a rocket scientist. He was working by himself on a rocket engine test bed, getting ready for a test the next day. Suddenly, without warning, he heard a voice say his name. He didn't know where it came from. He looked around, saw no one. The voice said his name again.

Then the voice said, 'Don't worry, I'm above you in a craft a few miles up.'

Gordon said the voice belonged to a person who wanted Moser to provide information about earth and humans, so that this visitor could begin to adjust to living here. An arrangement was struck whereby Moser would bring the visitor library books, the visitor would read them at incredible speed, then Moser would get more. On more than one occasion, Moser went aboard the visitor's craft. The visitor looked human enough to pass on the street, but he was not used to earth gravity and had a hard time breathing our air. It took him five years to acclimate to earth conditions. Then he started living on the surface. Moser stayed in close touch with him.

I asked Gordon if he ever met the visitor. "No. I hinted around again and again, but Moser never introduced us."

Where is the visitor now? Gordon said he doesn't know. The visitor learned to blend into human society and became a businessman, Moser said.

Why was the visitor here? Gordon said Moser told him the visitor's people had been in space a long time. They were a very old race, and their planet had died when their sun died. They didn't want to invade or change our society. They just wanted to live on solid ground. Earth took some getting used to, but Moser's visitor friend had adjusted well. Presumably there were many others.

There was another opportunity for him to meet aliens, but it fell through.   It was in 1972 or 1973, just after he left the space program. He was in touch with a group of people who were at Giant Rock in the Mojave Desert of California. There was to be an arrangment whereby Gordon and a small group could attend a contact event and even record it on film. The day before the scheduled event, there was a preliminary meeting where something went wrong. Gordon said he wasn't there and doesn't know exactly what happened; but it resulted in cancelling the next day's event.

Speaking as one who knows (to his own satisfaction, at least) that a variety of alien types are visiting the earth, he's convinced that most of them are benevolent, although some may be unfriendly or even dangerous. He didn't seem too concerned about the negative types.

Had there been a technology transfer? He said it was quite possible that the story told by Bob Lazar about saucers at a secret base in Nevada was true; and that wreckage had probably been recovered at Roswell and elsewhere. I asked him if he thought the rumors about a landing at Holloman Air Force Base in New Mexico were true, and he thought perhaps they were.

Having previously learned of Gordon's friendly relations with the "Black" world of super-secrecy -- one of his business partners was formerly a top official in the Lockheed Skunk Works, and Gordon has worked from time to time with various intelligence agencies, including the CIA -- I have to assume that he knows far more than he would ever divulge to me, particularly in this kind of get-acquainted conversation.

Nonetheless, I found him remarkably open and willing to make quite amazing assertions. I'm convinced he really believes that aliens are here. That being the case, I'm glad he also seems convinced that most of our alien visitors are friendly.
