

Rex Heflin Photo

---

These photos are several generations removed from the original small Polaroid photos. It will be difficult to see with clarity items discussed by other researchers in the past. The main item of importance is an apparent dirt funnel on the ground directly underneath the craft. In better photos you can see shadow and lighting characteristics from the sun to the ground.

Rex Heflin resides in California, retired and ill from the the effects of years of work on the roadways. Back in 1965, Heflin reported that he was contacted by an agency which took his photos, promising to return them though they never did.

As mysteriously as they disappeared, Heflin received a phone call several years ago and was told to check his rural mailbox which he did. Finding the Polaroids there, Heflin decided to sell them to help pay medical bills. They reportedly were sold for $750.

---

BACK