Groom Lake Hazardous Waste Lawsuit

Former workers and widows of workers claim injuries resulting from illegal hazardous waste practices at Area 51 in the 1970s and 80s. Highly toxic resins were allegedly dumped into open pits and burned, and workers at the base were exposed to the fumes. The most prominent plaintiff is Helen Frost, widow of Robert Frost, who died in 1988. An autopsy of Frost's body revealed high levels of dioxins and other carcinogens which the widow contends were caused by exposure to fumes at the base. In 1996, the lawsuit was dismissed by a Federal judge on the grounds of military's national security privilege. That decision has since been appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco, and the appeal is pending. [GC 8/96]

- 10/16/96: "Ex-workers: Judge ignored Area 51 evidence": Pro removal, opening of records sought," reports the 10/14 Las Vegas Sun, recording the filing of 118-page appeal.

A Las Vegas federal judge is accused of ignoring the law and repeatedly ruling against former Area 51 workers in a lawsuit over alleged unlawful burning of toxic waste at the once-secret military base. The workers charge that U.S. District Judge Philip Pro refused to examine any evidence that would support their allegations and perhaps reveal that the government lied or at least exaggerated its claims of national security.
