SPACE CYLINDER FOUND IN TEXAS

On the Austin Texas local TV news yesterday (KXAN I think) there was a story and video of a rancher who had a beat up looking, long metal cylinder land on his ranch near Georgetown, Texas, about 100 miles north of Segiun. The reports interviewed some retired NASA engineers who believe that this object and the one in Sequin are both parts of a NASA satellite launch that went astray. They had pictures of the mission in question, but I can't remember the designation.

NUCLEAR CONVOY GUARDS

These guards are well-armed, but it would still be pretty easy to hijack a nuclear load with a little planning. A neat little weapon I just read about is a net that fires from the grenade launcher under an m-16 or by itself for defense against helicopters. For more about similarly armed gov't security, mainly nuclear missile silos, check out the article "could terrorists hijack a nuclear missile" in the august 1996 issue of popular mechanics. Very cool.

GREEK INDEED

I think that a strong sign that Lazar's testimony is true, is the whole things with this(and last) year's movies. It is said in some MJ-12 docs, that the gov started to produce movies(from the background) to make the world familiar with the Alien thing. That was in the early 80's. But the docs say, that somewhere in middle 80's the relations between gov and Aliens were starting to tense. Please consider that these docs are dated in 87, or 89. Now, think about this year's movies. The arrival, Independence Day, and more to come..(maybe American fellows already saw some others, but here, Europe, Greece we did not yet). If we assume that the docs are right, maybe we should start to worry ? BBecause you see, the messages in ET and Close Encounters etc is not the same with ID or the Arrival, or anything else new...i think you got my point !
I would like some feedback on this.
