

Arizona Aurora?

This is pretty much what my wife and I saw.

Imagine you are standing on the ground looking up to the north and seeing the underside of a cloud about 50(?) miles away.

It's hard to believe, but the "anti-contrail" was initially just as sharp as I have drawn it. That's why it caught my attention. I don't know of anything that can do that to a cloud. I don't know if high altitude winds could make such a clean break in a cloud.

I would have taken a picture but it only lasted about 15 minutes after I noticed it.
