To whom it may concern:
        My mother just recently told me that the passenger airliner that she rode in made an emergency landing at Area 51 while she was on the way to Las Vegas from San Francisco. She told me that they were forced to land there because there was a high wind advisory and that no planes were allowed to land at the airport. Because her airplane did not have enough fuel to remain in the holding pattern, they radioed in permission to land at Area 51. She told me that while the plane was on the ground, her jetliner was surrounded by at least 10-15 military vehicles. All of them had their machine guns trained on the airplane. While the passengers were waiting, the air force refueled the plane and let the plane take off with a full fighter escort out of the restricted airspace. She told me that she was on the ground for approximately 30 minutes. All hangars were closed shut and all she could see were the soldiers and military vehicles. I was supposed to go to Las Vegas with her... That was definitely one trip I should have taken with my mom!!!! Some people have all the luck. I just wished that she could have taken some pictures. She told me that some of the passengers were able to take snapshots of the base from within the cabin. Maybe you could post a message asking if anyone has photographs available... If you need to reach me, my address is speedyzx@pacbell.net. Just think, most people can't get close to Area 51 but my mother was right smack dab in the middle of area 51.
