 Subject: My Father was at Roswell

My father worked for the highway department during the time of the Roswell crash. We lived in town and one of my brothers was born there. He was a surveyor for the state. Many a time he would be in the middle of nowhere surveying for roads etc. It just so happened that the area he was working during that time was just 8 miles from the crash scene. He knew a lot of people by just the nature of the work. In them days working out there you usually saw the same people daily. He did have a friend from the AF who was on patrol in the area even before the crash occurred. They became friends and he even came over for dinner a couple of times. My father was on his way to the area he was working and was stopped by his buddy who was now directing the closure of the area due to the crash. They started to jawing and he told my dad: "Its the craziest thing I ever seen." My dad was so curious that he kept probing him till he said: "Ray you know I'd never thought there would be a day when I believed in UFOs but today's the day." This guy practically became our uncle over the next 6 months or so. My father was escorted out of the area that day and our friend came over 3 nights later with his future wife. They got to talking and he told my dad that he was on the base when the ambulance pulled up with the aliens inside of the vehicle. My dad was a drinker and so was he and let me tell you they must have drunk all night cause my mom got so upset she told him to leave. He was crying on my dad's shoulder and telling him how he was going to leave the AF because of the pressure to keep their mouths shut and the constant interrogating every time he went back to base. We brought up to my dad what our friend had said about the UFO's. When you live in a trailer it's not hard to hear people talking in the living room. They would send us to bed, but a lot of times we weren't sleeping, you know kids. I got the worst butt beating just for bringing it up. It did happen and the government is about as truthful as SATAN. WE were there.
