TENAX DENIES UFO GROUPS' CLAIM THAT VORTEX FIRST RELEASED EXAMPLE OF SPACE ALIEN SOFTWARE

Denying reports by European UFO groups that Vortex software in anyway derives from work on crashed space ships, Tenax Software Engineering today announced that it is releasing the web version of the software for general use in spite of fears by some groups that this release is the beginning of a world domination scheme.

"Our Cornix applet and the Vortex application are NOT the result of any work undertaken on alien spacecraft." said Cliff High, president of Tenax Software Engineering. "We want to be very clear about this. Vortex and the MARS technology are purely the work of local (earth) boys. No alien technology is involved. We never at any time consciously modeled our work after any example of space alien information delivery systems."

"It is true that Vortex software (and the web version, Cornix) allow humans to read at phenomenal speeds from computer screens (up to 2000 words per minute for Vortex and 1000 words per minute for Cornix), but these speeds are the result of careful engineering of the software to harmonize with the biomechanical systems of the human mind/body and do not relate in any way to secret work on crashed alien spacecraft by the government or any private agency." High went on to state. "We categorically deny any involvement with any group investigating any alleged crashed alien ships."

"Our software success in augmenting human capabilities is the direct result of interdisciplinary research into human orthotics and the superior skills of our programming staff". High went on to say, " The success of Vortex software for users of all reading abilities is the result of a unique and patent pending view of the next generation of computing, and NOT the theft of space alien intellectual property."

Further statements deny that the general release of the Cornix applet to the world wide web community in any way are a danger to the peace and freedom of planet earth. "The only risks to using our software are the potential for greater understanding and comprehension in a shorter period of time." Cliff High stated in response to the suggestion that the Cornix applet will subvert the world. " It is true that webvertisers may have something to fear, but the general reading population is safe except for the possibility of entertaining a new thought".

In effort to quash any thoughts that the Cornix applet will alter humanity more significantly than fast food or indoor plumbing, Tenax has made a standing offer to supply a review copy of the product to any credentialed member of the press. Such copies can be obtained by contacting Tenax at 360.866.1686 or through email at chigh@halcyon.com.
"We'll let the press make up their own minds, is this space alien technology or just bald earth guys with a bit of sharp thinking?"

Background - Vortex

Representing a new classification of software known as "orthotics" or "human augmentation software", Vortex takes the computer user where no other software dares to go... to the limits of the mind. Using a unique patent pending display and intelligent agent technology, Vortex powers reading into the next millennium. By separating legibility factors from the underlying document, Vortex provides the user with complete control over the presentation of the document contents. Vortex augments every readers' ability.

By harmonizing with the biomechanical aspects of the human body Vortex delivers a new form of information transfer to the computer user.

Vortex 3.0 is the Reading Power Tool for home, office or on the road. Even spies are power reading with Vortex. (Ask us about the CIA connection.) Vortex 3.0 not only features speeds to 2000 words per minute and reactive text (the ability to react to what it is helping you read), font sizes to 3000 points, custom color control, and reactive punctuation, it now also works with your MS Internet Mail or Internet News Reader, or your Eudora Email program. Vortex is in the process of being made compatible with other email programs.

Vortex 3.0 Gold retails for $79.95 and can be obtained directly from Tenax Software Engineering at 1-800-966-1686.

Background - Cornix

Cornix is an internet version of a new type of software called 'orthotics', also known as 'Human Augmentation Software'. A java applet, Cornix allows visitors to web pages to read the text contents with ease and comfort at speeds up to 1000 words per minute in font sizes as large as 200 points.

A java implementation of Vortex, the Power reading tool for computer screens, Cornix is available for download and free use during the beta phase. Delivering the patent pending technology from Vortex, Cornix is easily embedded in web pages, and provides any web page with a unique presentation. Designed for close integration with the bio-mechanisms of the human body, Cornix provides a completely new information transfer experience for the page visitor. Using the latest in mind-brain research, Cornix, like Vortex, will deliver a new level of skill to readers of all levels.
