There certainly isn't a super secret Air Force Base in the _City_ of San Bernadino, which is a pretty dense area. The Air Force base there is Norton, which is being closed. (I've been there, and there is little chance of anything too secret there, aside from offices.)

The _County_ of San Bernadino is another story, however, since it covers a vast area of Southern California, all the way from the L.A. area to the Nevada border. Fort Irwin, Twenty-Nine Palms Marine Base and parts of China Lake Naval Weapons Center are located within the county. The idea of a secret air base within these areas is not impossible (although I would regard a large facility as improbable).

It seems odd that a county official would be uncomfortable about talking, though, since there is no secrecy in county affairs. If there was a secret facility within an existing military reservation, I don't see why the county would need to know about it -- or why a county employee would have to clam up about it. -- GC

Hi Glenn,
 I was just wondering if you knew the exact directions on how to find an entrance to an underground alien base, preferreably in California???

[Exact directions always seem hard to come by, but I know they're out there, somewhere in California. --GC]
