From the Book Cover

The Oliver Stone film JFK is one of the most provocative movies of our time. In addition to its box-office success, critical acclaim and awards, it played a major role in the national debate that led to the passage of the 1992 Assassination Materials Disclosure Act.

For this exclusive home video edition, director/co-writer Stone has added 17 minutes of footage to the Academy Award-winning movie, lending new excitement to the mosaic of Jim Garrison's turbulent investigation of President John F. Kennedy's murder.

"We must start to change things. We must start by looking at the '60s not as history but as a seminal decade for the postwar generation coming into power in the '90s. We still have a choice. What is past is prologue. To forget that past is to be condemned to relive it." -- Oliver Stone
