From the Book Cover

In the age-old game of separating fools from their money, there's a whole new crop of all-too-eager dupes ripe for harvesting by the latest breed of cynical con men. The victims include bored housewives looking for otherworldly answers to everyday dilemmas, middle-aged men suddenly desperate for mystical meaning in their lives, and a host of well-off weenies searching for an all-knowing shepherd wise to the ways of the unexplained, unknown, and otherwise unbelievable. The thieves include 1-900 telephone psychics quick with vague "readings" of every caller's life, alien abductees bursting with fantastic tales of their contact with extraterrestrials (all revealed in their new book for only $29.95), and a galaxy of telepaths, crystal gazers, astrologers, dolphin channelers, crop circle interpreters, and anyone else who has dreamed up an incredible new way to get at the minds and money of gullible folks everywhere!

In Scams from the Great Beyond, author, researcher, and sometimes skeptic Peter Huston delves into this strange, silly, and sometimes sad reincarnation of P.T. Barnum's amazingly astute observation, "There's a sucker born every minute" (which, ironically, is one of the only accurate future predictions ever uttered). In demonstrating just how easy it is to fake ESP powers like clairvoyance and telekinesis, devise your own UFO photos from ordinary objects or the latest computer technology, or simply pass yourself off as a guru worthy of high admission fees to hear you speak pseudomystical gibberish at seminars and retreats, Huston's goal is straightforward: to promote critical thinking and educate readers so they will use logic and reason to protect themselves and others from the swindlers, cultists, and con men whose goals are to lie, trick, rob, and control people by using claims of the miraculous.

Whether you're a curious student of arcane knowledge who is intrigued but slightly cautious about paranormal phenomena, or a lifelong cynic who shakes your head in disbelief every time you pass the bulletin board at a health food store, you should read this book. It is one path to true enlightenment!
