Our Review

Opinion of the webmaster, subject to debate

Credibility	Research Value	Cultural Interest	Visual Information	Style	Silliness	Wow Factor	Bargain
1	1	4	0	4	5	3	3
Very Low	Very Low	High	None	Stylish	Very High	Interesting	Moderate

Explanation of Ratings

Credibility = Very Low: In general, this category is a rating of the author's intellectual discipline and the strength of his argument (which are very low), not the veracity of his claims (which could be true in spite of the weak argument).

Style = Stylish: Easy & fun to read if you are in the mood for silliness.

Silliness = Very High: High silliness isn't necessarily a bad thing. Such items often make amusing gifts or may be interesting as cultural artifacts.

It is like George Adamski never really died but was reincarnated in the body of Phillip Krapf, a former editor for the Los Angeles Times. In the early morning hours of June 11, 1997, Krapf says he was abducted by pointy-eared aliens called the Verdants. They took him aboard their vessel and subjected him to unspeakable torture: meeting after meeting with ambassadors and functionaries from the Intergalactic Federation of Sovereign Planets (IFSP). Krapf spent three days with the visitors, being briefed on the state of the universe, the savage nature of humanity, etc. The aliens are already in the process of recruiting "ambassadors" among earth's elite (including one planted at the current LA Times), and by the year 2002 these representatives will start revealing themselves. By 2003, we'll all know the score, as our planet is peacefully inducted into the IFSP.... But do we really want to join? The book gave us the impression that the visitors are mired in bureaucracy. The Federation is composed of committees, sub-committees, ambassadors and deputies, who can't seem to do anything without first conducting a study. Given the problems of intergalactic administration described herein, we wouldn't be surprised if that 2003 deadline is pushed back by a century or two. -- Glenn Campbell

Reservations

As expected, the author offers not one scrap of corroborating evidence for his claims. Even his wife was away at the time of the supposed abduction, so cannot verify it. More importantly, no comparison is attempted between this experience and that of other abductees -- probably the only useful method for approaching such claims. (If two people who have had no contact with each other report the same abduction details, that coincidence is something we can investigate. Krapf's experiences don't seem to coincide with the other well-known abduction reports.) The marketing of this book depends on the author being a former LA Times journalist, but none of the rules of journalism are applied here. Still, the book is easy and fun to read if you happen to be in the mood for silliness.

Comparison to Other Books

This book reminds us of Philip Corso's Day After Roswell. An old guy tells a fantastic tale that would never have been heard if not for the author's apparently disguised background.

From the Book Cover

"I awoke with a start and found the bedroom bathed in a bluish, iridescent light. At first, I thought that I had fallen asleep with the TV on, but the screen was dark. The lighted dial on the bedside digital clock radio read 2:32 a.m. It was Wednesday, June 11, 1997..."

And so began the most astounding journey that former Los Angeles Times journalist Phillip H. Krapf had ever embarked on in the 62 years of his life. In those early-morning hours, Krapf found himself whisked aboard an alien spaceship where he spent the next three days being peacefully indoctrinated into a fascinating new world by extraterrestrials called "Verdants."

What he learned there was that these alien beings, who have been observing the Earth for 1,000 years have decided that the time has come for mankind to be invited into the Intergalactic Federation of Sovereign Planets. Hundreds of prominent world citizens have been, and are still being, recruited to serve as emissaries to help smooth the way for the eventual extraterrestrial-terrestrial contact that is planned to occur by the end of the first decade of the 21st century.

This is the story of one person's recruitment to serve as the official chronicler of the coming event.
