AUFORA News Update
Wednesday, July 30th 1997 <http://www.aufora.org/>

This is the final mailing of the AUFORA News Update list. AUFORA has ceased all research activity and will no longer exist as an entity.

However, the information contained on the AUFORA website, and the information distributed on this mailing list are still valuable and essential. Thus, while AUFORA ceases to exist, the information will be found in a new form. Those who have visited the former AUFORA site recently may have noted the emerging change. The end of AUFORA marks the beginning of exoSci.com.

exoSci.com (exoScience) will feature information and news from astronomy, astrophysics, exobiology, and ufology. The first information section, ufology, is now being launched, and will soon be followed by exobiology.

exoSci.com will also feature a mailing list similar in format to this one. The future will reveal more details about this.

Immediately, you can visit the former AUFORA website at its new location under exoSci.com at:
<http://www.exosci.com/ufo/>

The site has undergone some content changes. Most notably:
* a new search interface to search for keywords among the site's content
* the Abductee Art Archive featuring art drawn and inspired by alleged abductees.

I welcome you all to visit this new site. The exobiology portion of exoScience will launch within a few weeks, with astronomy and astrophysics following shortly behind. I encourage you to spread the word about this new emerging site, and I thank you and the entire internet UFO community for your support in the past of the AUFORA initiative.

Thanks!
Dave Watanabe
