Tel Aviv, Israel, 5 January 1998
The Truster Is Available

The long awaited controversial software is now available at $149. The Truster is an online Lie Detector that can analyze the voice through a phone conversation and show you on the screen whether the person you are conversing with is lying, outsmarting you, exaggerating, unsure of his words or telling the truth.

The product is patent pending and is the first in a line of products based on the same technology. The product was developed by Makh-Shevet in Israel and can be used in various situations in which you want to see the 'whole picture'.

The Truster will surely mark a new era. Politicians will have to think twice on what they say in during their campaigns, voters will be able to check the speeches in their Trusters. Salesmen will have to be far more cautious when selling their wares over the phone. How about getting some real answers when you are shopping for your new home or car? No more 'Yes, I did my homework' over the phone to mom. Business people will have more of a clear view when they are told 'the check is in the mail' or 'this is my best price, it is pointless to go on arguing'. And how about the assertion 'I was in the pub with my friends last night'?

"We are seeking to make a slight change in the world", said Tamir Segal, CEO of Makh-Shevet. "We realize that the product is controversial, but it lies in the hands of each user to apply it correctly."

FROM THE MODERATOR

I would doubt that this could work unless you had a "baseline" measurement of what the person's voice was like when they were not lying (as with conventional lie detectors).
