For those that follow the Lazar saga, a real estate friend of mine informs me that he recently bought a decommissioned underground Atlas "F" missile base outside of Roswell, NM. He said that Lazar paid in full with a check from his company and was moving heavy equipment out to the site yesterday

Apparently, he and this guy Jon Farhat are converting it into some sort of Biodome. They have a web site about this thing at <http://www.jfi.net/underground>

To confirm that it is Lazar, see http://www.jfi.net/underground/about_us.htm

Here is the profile of the two principals, re-posted here for the record....

Robert Lazar: Founder, Senior Physicist, Project Manager.
Jon Farhat: Founder, Engineering, Design and Digital Supervisor.

Both Lazar and Farhat are officers of Terraform Inc. and together maintain the CERF research facility.

Robert Lazar

President, United Nuclear, design and manufacture of Alpha radiation detection equipment for nuclear weapons industry. Executive director, Neon Caterpillar Productions, specializing in computer systems analysis. President, Jet Processing Imaging Systems, industrial photo imagery. Formerly, Nuclear Physicist, Los Alamos National Laboratories, New Mexico, involved in advanced nuclear weapon design and development. U.S.Department of Navy, Nevada Test Site, Senior Staff Physicist, advanced propulsion development. Co Founder: Terraform Inc.

Jon Farhat

President JFI Inc. An entertainment and information publishing studio. Jon Farhat is an Academy Award Nominated Visual Effects director in Hollywood CA. Some of his most recent credits include The Nutty Professor, The Mask, My Fellow Americans, and is currently finishing a project for 20th Century Fox called Dr. Dolittle. Farhat combines his extensive background in mathematics, industrial engineering and computer generated imagery to produce visual designs, growth analysis and monitoring systems for the facilities experiments. Co Founder: Terraform Inc.

And here is their project...

Ultimately, the purpose of Project Terraform is to create a subterranean, self-contained environment that precisely duplicates the ambient temperatures, pressures, atmospheric and chemical compositions of the planet Mars. This will enable researchers to perform an ongoing real-time analysis of the Martian ecosystem based on data from the Pathfinder and Viking Martian probes. The project will be split into two phases. Phase 1 will test the integrity of the facility by sustaining a sealed biological Earth environment for a period of approximately 6 months. The 2 story Control Center will monitor conditions within the Silo Chamber and also serve as the main operations area, providing state of the art computer and communication facilities well as a general work area for the researchers involved. Phase 2 will be the conversion, operation and maintenance of the Silo Chamber into a stable equatorial Martian environment. Total conversion time of the chamber is expected to take approximately 12 months to complete after the termination of Phase 1.
