List of UFO "Hot Spots"

A journalist writes:

>I'm working on another travel piece, this time on UFO vacations--the >best places around the country people can go to see UFOs. I was >wondering if you'd be willing to come up with a list of the 10-15 best >places in America for UFO spotting (and maybe 2-3 abroad for variety).
>We would, of course, credit you for your assistance and link to the Area >51 website as a courtesy as well.

I don't want to offer a best or worst of anything paranormal -- apart from reviews of books -- since this assumes that there is some standard for judging these things

I can tell you the places where people actually go expecting to see UFOs -- which doesn't say anything about the veracity of the UFOs themselves. I guess you could define a hot spot as anyplace you can buy a local UFO t-shirt. (That's the main aim of modern ufology.)

- Nevada Highway 375, Milepoint 29-1/2, near Rachel, Nevada (looking toward Area 51). I would guess that this is the top spot, but of course I have no figures. "Top" doesn't mean there are hordes of watchers there: Maybe 2-5 cars parked in the side of the road on a peak summer night.
- Sedona, Arizona. A very scenic area that is supposedly a center of New Age energy. All sorts of vague UFO sightings but no nearby military base to peg them to. Because of the many recreation opportunities and colorful local culture, this is probably the best tourist destination of any of these sites. Plenty of things to buy.
- Roswell (sort of). Certainly has more tourists than all the other sites combined, but not many visitors are expecting to see UFOs there right now. Offers LOTS of t-shirts and every manner of alien trinket.
- Midway, New Mexico. This almost-invisible settlement about 5 miles south of Roswell is the birthplace of the "Roswell Rods" -- Blurry, rapidly moving objects videotaped by local residents.
- Gulf Breeze, Florida. Supposedly a hot-spot for sightings, but I don't know if many people go there for that purpose.

I'm sure you can find t-shirts.

- Mexico City. Supposedly a hot spot, but I know little.
- Marfa, Texas (south of). Home of the "Marfa Lights" reported for over a century. Like Rachel, there are supposed to be specific places on the highway you should watch from.
- Dulce, New Mexico. Supposed location of an underground alien base under the Archuleta Mesa, with corresponding UFO activity. This scenic area in Northern NM can easily be included in a tour of other New Mexico attractions. The town seems to be indifferent to the publicity, so there might not be any souvenirs.
- Devil's Tower, Wyoming. You could throw this in as the setting for the movie, "Close Encounters."
- Central England. The crop circle capital, along with corresponding UFO activity. I have no idea where to go exactly, but I'm sure you can find t-shirts.

These are the ones that come to mind first. I suspect there are others. (You want ghosts? Bigfoot?)

There are a lot of other sites which, like Roswell, are supposed to be the locations of UFO incidents in the past but where most visitors are not expecting to see UFOs today.

There is at least one company that offers tours to UFO hotspots. (You know it must be hot if they offer a tour there.) See <http://www.beyondboundaries.org/> Their expeditions archive could be helpful.

There is also a fairly hokey book we sell by Jenny Randles: "UFOs and How to See Them." Offers a directory of alleged world UFO hotspots. See: <http://www.ufomind.com/catalog/isbn/8069/0297/>
