 Subject: Roswell Secrets revealed on American Computer

Hi,

I thought you would be interesting in knowing the entire story of the ACC site, and break in. So, I have been asked to submit it to you, so that no further disinformation will result. I was asked by a friend who works at ACC:

==== STATEMENT from the American Computer Company to "SKYWATCH":

As always, American Computer wishes to warn you that any investigation into the break in at their offices is "incomplete" and at this time "inconclusive as to the perpetrators and as to the purpose".

a) American Computer Company posted the stories on their website three weeks ago at <http://www.american-computer.com>

<http://www.american-computer.com/roswell.htm>

b) The following Sunday night about a week later, after 5:30 PM and before 5:30 AM Monday, someone broke into the ACC building by, apparently (at least this is the conclusion drawn by those present at the scene the next day):

i) using equipment which enabled them to somehow get past the magnetically locked doors, and through the key card entries, without setting off silent alarms - only one recorded card access, an exit attempt without an id, of a suspicious nature was found, but no CARD ID was recorded by the Computer, purportedly;

ii) getting PAST motion detectors in the lobby and going up stairs to the floor on which they reside;

iii) getting PAST motion detectors in the upstairs lobby, proceeding to their heavy plate glass, locked doors, and;

iv) without attracting any attention, (we are talking about a Corporate structure here, with no guards present after 5:30 PM) smashing a huge, heavy duty floor to ceiling plate glass and lexan door, to enter their offices. It was rather seriously torn to pieces.

c) A few days prior to that break in, a mysterious telephone truck was chased off the company parking lot when someone was discovered by ACC's security department crosswiring the telephone lines in the floor and basement telephone rooms.

d) A few days prior to that break in, wierd faxes reportedly arrived at ACC headquarters TECH SUPPORT FAX, which resembled messages from classified military equipment, computer equipment which the person(s) partially responsible for the Roswell story on the ACC website had designed under contract a decade earlier.

e) Those faxes were reported to the Military authorities, who apparently did not respond to the reports, at first.

f) When ACC returned to work on Monday AM that week, it was found that during the breakin the Sunday night before, while a few offices had been randomly entered and a few innocuous things removed from them, a CDROM radio, a clock, an old Laptop (almost as if to point the finger in that direction) and about $5.00 in change from an honor bar, however: several keyperson offices were thoroughly searched, including vandalization during search and rummaging through recorded CDs, XRAY proof containers containing tapes, file cabinets, drawers, and desks. However, valuables in plain sight (endorsed checks, gold chains, purses, extremely expensive computers by the dozen) were all ignored, and the only OBJECTS taken from these keyperson offices were a couple of Car Phones being charged in desk chargers, both of which were inactive and valueless. Fingerprint tests were inconclusive, on the entries, objects thrown all over the floor and cabinets/desks which had been searched. We note the difference between the valuables taken, and the effort and cost it took to get in and out unobserved, in a Corporate Park regularly patrolled by very aggressive law enforcement (with limited road egress).

g) About a day after the break in, when it was reported to a Pentagon official that the break in had ocured, The US Air Force elected to send an OSI team to the site to gather information. No additional information is available about this event.

ACC asks that you pass on the following: Please be careful how you interpret information posted by third parties about these events, as it is important, ACC feels, that any information that is discussed or disclosed about these matters be factual, given the subject matter, so that wild speculation does not occur and so that unsubstantiated rumors do not block out the truth, hope against hope.

American Computer Company has indicated that it is both unable to verify the story on its website and unable to dispute the facts alleged in its website, at this time. ACC is openly soliciting the world's opinion, through a form on its website, each and every one of which it will endeavor to respond to.

===== END OF STATEMENT

Now, back to my regularly scheduled participation in this list!
