About Philip Corso and his Roswell "revelations," Kevin Randlewrote:

Earlier, we read Corso's testimony before a Congressional committee about the Korean War, full of charges about Korean War veterans alive for many years afterward in the Soviet Union, and close Soviet control over China and North Korea.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but my impression is that these notions have been quite thoroughly discredited. I've read a fair amount about Soviet history, and I'd always thought the USSR -- despite American notions of a deadly international Communist conspiracy -- was fairly helpless before the North Koreans and the Chinese. The Chinese, certainly, were disenchanted with the Russians long before the split between the countries burst into the open in the early '60s. The idea that the USSR kept tight control over North Korean and Chinese behavior in the Korean War doesn't jibe with anything real historians have found out.
