One could pose a lot of what-if scenarios to your first question. Clearly, the main thrust of current research and efforts in proving a presence would change. Those groups willing to refocus to specific issues would survive quite nicely.

I think the fall of communism in the traditional sense, and the fear associated with it should have ended the concerns about chaos. There may well be some problems in third world countries as they try to rationalize such information within the context of their religions.

However, I think these would be relatively minor and short lived.
