Peregrine, Duke of Mendoza presents his compliments to the List.

After a short respite visiting my old Mum in K-- - Whoops! Sorry - I mean spending some days intensively debriefing one of our longest-serving agents at a safe house believed to be only a few miles from RAF Manston somewhere in the south east of England...

It's hard to keep a straight face. Surely one who seriously presents the thickness of a book's pages as evidence of counter-intelligence, secret subsidies, disinformation campaigns and the author's clandestine military service is a sail or two short of the full ship. As sad as Bob Shell's notion that CNN drop an item from the 3am news because they've been got at by the gov't, or someone else's amazement that Kodak works for Uncle Sam. I mean, it's pretty weird they hired Boeing to build aircraft, too, isn't it? Golly-gee, Billy-Bub, do you think IBM makes computers for them? And naturally I am a paedophile child murderer because I think gun controls don't work. And so on. If you really expect me not to laugh I shall suspect you of having a sense of humor.

Gad, the fellow's a bounder, sir, and be sure to keep your daughters a safe distance from the slithy tove. Perhaps no one has told the doughty Yeoman Brian, scourge of Black Ops everywhere, that authors rarely write blurbs. And how unscrupulous for a skeptic to attempt to persuade the undecided of the virtues of his perspective. No True Believer would stoop so low. [It's easier ignore the skeptics altogether, eh, Mr Berliner, and take your money from Mr Rockefeller who, we all know, is a monstrous agent of the New World Order... er... um... conspiracy theories get a bit tangled here - half a mo - Mmmmmmmmmmm.] Perhaps I should stop thanking people who point out errors in my captions (for the gesture is a sure sign of an unprincipled debunker, and unspeakable depths of deviousness in the fungus-like plot of disinformation).

I have also noticed how politicians never try to convince anyone to vote for them, and men never try to charm women off their feet. This explains why only a few election candidates actually get elected, I expect (and definitely explains why so few men, as opposed to gentlemen, get laid).

I confess (I do, really) that I cannot suppress my awe at the meticulous detail and scrupulous fact-checking that has gone into the research here:

> Brookesmith pretends to be "long interested in the paranormal", > which is crap.

I guess 17 years of publishing stuff about the paranormal isn't long, given that nothing ever changes in this whimsical field. And Zeiler's sudden access to all my filthy secrets doubtless explains why he still hasn't bothered to e-mail me a suitable form of release document for his FOIA requests.

> I'll be sure to post examples [of "shifty spookiness", presumably--PB] > with excruciating detail, and Brookesmith will have the right to > defend himself.

Splutter, sob. I can barely express my gratitude at your condescension.

Isn't confessing to being a MOSSAD agent enough for you people? You want me to admit I really work for Satan? Here's a clue. You put yourself in mortal danger every time you surf the Web, you know. The Web is a soul-control device cooked up by our boys in Rome (guess where) and our boys in Langley and Tel Aviv... W is letter 23 of the alphabet, right? WWW = 23 23 23 or 2x3, 2x3, 2x3 or -- Aaaaaiiiiiieeeee! -- 666!! Keep this to yourself, though, because you could only have got it from an Insider.

PS: Andy, Jerry, Steven J., Greg, and the rest of you: meet me under the hollow oak tree on Rendlesham Common at midnight for further instructions and a bonus. Reverse-engineered courtesy bus available.

PPS: Thanks to John Koopmans for getting to Fort before me.

PPPS: Yeah, I know, alien writing, rebuttal of Oberg, etc... I'll get there. Once more, thanks for the patience.
