Jorgen and David--

Your point is well taken. Believe me when I say that I know exactly what you mean. Leaping to wild conclusions can indeed be dangerous. But I stand by my statement that some cautious speculation can actually assist in an investigation. For example, Bob Shell mentioned a thoracic surgeon identifying the creatures' prosthetic device as an artificial heart valve. No matter its purpose, its presence on the AA footage can perhaps tell us many things: If it's a hoax, then the hoaxers apparently had access to artificial heart valves, implying that they had some sort of medical affiliation (?). If the glutinous innards of the dissected creature are indeed consistent with a high-speed air collision, could a similar effect be achieved using some other method, such as a centrifuge?

In short, the points raised in our speculative dialogue (points I haven't heard elsewhere, I might add) actually provide some telling (if vague) clues that might be able to get to the bottom of the footage's authenticity.

Sincerely,
Mac Tonnies
