Space aliens

This summer the Big Ear Observatory at Ohio State University will be dismantled and turned into a golf course. For 25 years, its radio telescope has searched unsuccessfully for intelligent life in the cosmos. However extraterrestrials are still glamorous and controversial creatures in the non-academic world:

* There are six species of ETs at the movies, writes Kurt Andersen in The New Yorker: more or less normal-looking people; hulking humanoids with enormous bald heads; the small, grey, hairless, chinless big-eyed waif (the type reported in most real sightings); the comic-relief plush toy; the swamp creature; the overdeveloped shellfish or insect. A successful alien, said a designer, is one that people can relate emotion to.
