Subject: Question for Kevin Randle

Kevin,

Last year at MUFON's conference in North Carolina you gave a talk about considering the role that pop culture might play in abduction stories.

Most people in the audience vehemently disagreed with your remarks by choosing to hear your message as All abductions are the result of pop culture. That was not the message that I heard you deliver and thought your talk was something investigators must take into account.

After having this discussion with a number of people, some who were at the MUFON Conference, many still argue with me over what you said. This brings me to my rather point blank question: Is it your belief that all abduction stories are the result of pop culture?

If you have any information about specific abduction cases being (in your opinion) the result of pop culture, would you cite them here please.

Thanks,
Rebecca
