While in Roswell for the 50th last July, I ended up waiting in a long line at a book signing (Corso's) and met several local residents and got into a discussion of the incident in 1947. One woman indicated that her father had been with the Fire Department in 1947 and had been instructed by the military to not discuss the incident. She said neither she, nor anyone else in her family had been able to get him to talk about what had happened. This was also because the military had ordered them not to talk about it.

Of course, this was only a conversation held in passing, and I now have no way of confirming the tale or asking questions. Of course Roswell is now making money from this "event", and one has to determine whether the comments made by residents are designed to promote the truth or tourism.

The woman I spoke with sounded sincere, but who knows.
