A natural-born beauty as Dolly has a little lamb

By Michael Seamark

Dolly the world's first cloned sheep proudly presented her new baby to the world yesterday - a beautiful spring lamb called Bonnie.

But, unlike her famous mother, the creation of the cuddly little newcomer - born 11 days ago - was entirely natural.

The father was a four year old Welsh mountain ram named David.

Graham Bulfield, director of the Roslin Institute in Edinburgh, which cloned Dolly from a single breast cell of another sheep, said: "Despite Dolly's unusual origins, the birth of her lamb confirms that she is able to breed normally and produce healthy offspring."

Dolly sparked an ethical and scientific furore when her existence was revealed last February. Some scientists questioned whether she is a true clone because her 'genetic' mother died before she was born and it has been impossible to prove the two animals were identical.

Bonny faces no such controversy. Dolly is a Finn Dorset and father David a completely different breed. After mating last November, Dolly was regularly monitored and in the days leading up to the birth was placed under 24 hour surveillance.

Bonnie was born at 4am on Easter Monday, weighing just under 7lb. Despite Dolly's clinical background, the institute said: "She has shown a strong maternal instinct and is an enthusiastic mother."

Bonnie's healthy birth is expected to counter fears that Dolly may be prone to premature ageing and age related disorders as a result of being cloned from a six year old adult. The lambs arrival also provides an important boost to the commercialisation of the technique that produced Dolly.

Dolly and Bonnie are currently spending much of their time indoors. For Bonnie, life will be longer than most of her kind - who end up on the dinner table.

"As a celebrity sheep, we will be keeping her here for her natural life," said the institute.

Tesco's to supply space station.

Supermarket giant Tesco could be sending it's home delivery service into orbit with an order to supply food to astronauts on the new space station.

Nasa has asked the store for samples of it's best selling lines with a view to putting them on the menu in space.

It is looking for nutritious food for the American/Russian space station when it is commissioned in 2003.

uk.ufo.nw says: Tesco's is one of the largest supermarket stores in the UK. We understand that Tesco's supplied food to Richard Branson and the Virgin Atlantic team for their round the world balloon attempt. Nasa were impressed with the nutritious foods supplied.

Northern Ireland under attack - by ET!

This has been reported in the local press recently, unfortunately all the papers have been thrown out so I'm going by memory!

Northern Ireland under attack - by ET!

On 13th December 1997 an explosion was heard near the town of Belleek in county Fermanagh Northern Ireland. The reports of the blast lead to the security forces doing a search for a suspected bomb and even closing off some roads but nothing was found.

It wasn't until the next month that a farmer noticed a extra 6 foot wide circular pond in one of his fields. Calls were made to Armagh Planetarium and they turned up to investigate the site. The crater was drained but nothing was found except a badly damaged milk churn. Later investigations managed to find a 1.5 mm bead of glass, it is unknown if this was the source of the crater but it's all they've found so far. The site is very muddy and it is suspected that the real culprit may have sank down out of reach. It either was small and hit very fast or was large and hit relatively slowly.

Planetarium officials noted that the object which landed had hit the ground had done so at almost 90 degrees and also pointed out that another rather larger object hit Greenland on the same night. This object was so big in fact that a scar was visible in satellite photos. Had the Greenland object hit in Northern Ireland it would have leveled the nearby town of Belleek.

Sighting near Ashington, Northumberland

I would like to report on a sighting my brother and his partner had in November 1996 which was the last of a number of objects they saw in the sky during the months of October and November in that year.

My brother and his girlfriend live on the NE coast of England near Ashington in Northumberland and it was about 5.25pm on the 4, 5 or 6 of November when after hearing the noise of a jet he looked out of his sons bedroom window towards the NW when he saw a group of lights moving South. Then suddenly from behind came a smaller group of lights which flew past the first group turning sharply Eastwards towards his home. Then from over the wood in front of my brothers house came what he described as being a disco of different rectangular shaped coloured lights of which were green, blue, purple, yellow, red and white. He noticed that the lights seemed to be stacked on top of each other in layers and that there were more red lights than the other colours.

He called on his partner and they both watched as the object passed slowly and silently over their home which they then lost sight of. They went outside to look but all they could see was a small cluster of lights in the distance which then disappeared.

If you have any reports of this sighting or would like more information on this or the other sightings they saw over these two months email me on the address below and I can put you in contact with them.

uk.ufo.nw says: After requesting further information Damian was good enough to send us the below report.

With regards to my brothers sightings, these earlier ones occurred over a period of a month up to the night of the one I wrote about earlier.

There was one evening when it was dark while he cycled home from a friends House. He saw an object hovering which he first thought was a helicopter but had no sound. He noticed that the object had a red, yellow and blue glow to it. He kept on walking and then lost sight of the object through the gaps of the houses which overlook the woods.

When the object was seen again about 12 seconds later it had travelled fast as it seemed much closer than before. He noticed it had two bright white bar lights and a flashing red light on top. There was no noise which you would expect if it were a helicopter. He lost sight of it again because of the houses so he peddled a further 100yds to the end of the street and saw the object again but it was slightly higher in altitude and a little more distant than before.

It then changed direction by moving sharply upwards at an angle he described as being about 80 degrees. When he got home he got out his binoculars and observed the object with his partner who he called from the bathroom to view the object too. The object by then looked different as there were seven lights, one being a white bar light which did not flash, the other a red flashing light as seen before and the others being orange in colour, which flashed in sequence.

He went to the park to observe the object out of the glare of the street lights and noticed that it would travel at high altitude from West to East before moving out of sight but sometimes crossing the same point of the sky. All through October he witnessed lights in the sky which were red, green and white (I am not sure at this time whether these lights were seen individually or on separate occasions or together) which moved about with flight paths that crossed the same parts of the sky regularly.

One night in late October he heard the noise of a jet and when he looked out of the window he saw an object he described as being a jumbo jet without wings as it had bar lighting running along 2/3rds the body of the tube with a red flashing light at the rear. This object passed very low over the house. This was a different object to the one which I wrote to you a while back.

Although I have copied from notes he has given me and put down in words that he has told me, there is a lot of patchy detail. I hope I have been helpful in giving you more information which may shed more light on identifying what was in the sky at that time.

The Search Goes On

Jodrell Bank, the world famous radio telescope in Cheshire is to be used to search for messages from other planets.

Operated by the University of Manchester, the 250 foot Lovell Telescope will link up with the 1,000 foot telescope at Arecibo in Puerto Rico.+ Speaking on BBC Radio, Ian Morrison said, "It will be the most sensitive search undertaken by man to see if there is anybody out there trying to talk to us."

In 1993 NASA stopped funding their own programme in the search for extraterrestrial intelligence, but did build a receiver capable of picking up 250 million signals simultaneously. "You don't know what frequency anyone might be transmitting to us so you have to search quite a broad band.", said Ian Morrison, "Now linking that receiver with the two most sensitive telescopes in the world makes a system that's really quite something and if anybody is going to pick up signals from out there I reckon we are going to do it."

Having the two telescopes situated over 1,000 miles apart will mean that interference from local transmissions can be ruled out. The two sites will be linked via the Internet and as soon as one finds a signal it will alert the other. The frequency of the transmission will also be slightly different at the two sites and so noises from satellites above Earth and further out in the Solar System can be eliminated.

Ian Morrison said, "I'm sure there is a lot of life out there. On our planet, life arose almost within years of the conditions becoming right - however it took a lot longer for more complicated life to evolve, about 3 billion years. We are beginning to discover other planets around other stars.... I'm sure that the Universe and the galaxy is teeming with life - now whether that life has got to the point where it could communicate or whether it would want to we don't know".

Leading project scientist Seth Shostak said, "It is my personal view we will find clear evidence of extra terrestrial life in the next 10-15 years".

Congressman Schiff Dies at 51

Steve Schiff, whose battle with skin cancer forced him to decide not to run for re-election this year, died today at age 51.

The five-term New Mexico Republican, who had been fighting aggressive squamous-cell skin cancer for more than a year, died this morning at his Albuquerque home.

Schiff had been absent from Washington, D.C., since last April but had been continuing to conduct 1st Congressional District from home.

During his years in Congress, Schiff was credited with a compromise plan that allowed Speaker Newt Gingrich to resolve ethics allegations by paying a $300,000 penalty to reimburse the government for investigative costs.

Once, when Schiff opposed a congressional pay raise, he donated the amount of the raise that year to charity.

He also gained headlines in 1993, reopening a federal investigation into the so-called Roswell Incident in which extraterrestrial beings were purported to have crashed northwest of Roswell in 1947. Schiff asked the General Accounting Office, Congress' investigative arm, to seek Air Force documents relating to the incident. The Air Force said a secret high-tech spy balloon crashed, not an alien spacecraft.

Entity ?? contact, Australia.

My name is Barry Davidson, I am a retired Police Officer and currently a businessman in the manufacturing field.

On the evening of 18th and 19th of April, 1996, my family and I, four people in total, were involved for a period of several hours of contact with, for want of a better description, an electrical entity. The 'entity' was not visible but was real enough to cause physical injury through electrical discharge when accidentally contacted physically. It moved for a distance of approx. 120 feet throughout the house over a period of approx. 4.5 hours and seemed to conduct it's movements intelligently, always being in an area where we would easily locate it.

A list of the injuries suffered by the participants to the event include the following. Low grade radiation sickness, extreme nausea, severe headaches lasting for from two weeks to three months, skin marking, [not scars.] Three of the participants have developed, at the same time, acute subjective tinnitus. All suffered aches and soreness to muscles and joints.

Evidence left behind includes a sheltered rock in the garden edging blasted to pieces, [shrubby undamaged], blast or abrasion marks on the adjacent pathway, a candle partly melted and separated of it's chemical componentry, [the stearin reverting to crystalline form] and the wick exposed but not charred. There was a shadow imprint of the pergola roof on the mossy pathway below. An anomalous telemetry printout was received from the nearby reservoir monitoring station which cannot be explained. Unusual plant growth in the immediate area, etc. etc.

At approx 12.20 am on the morning of 19th, April, a local couple, both respected business people, witnessed a large orange dome or globe directly above our house. This dome seemed to be emitting blue/orange light rays downwards towards the house. This time coincides with the anomalous printout from the telemetry and also one of the more spectacular events within the house.

My reason for writing to you is as follows: I have investigated the incident as I would have a crime. I have preserved the evidence trail and secured the evidence and statements taken. I am afraid that I have used up all of the resources available to me in Australia in my attempts to investigate the incident, both at an official and unofficial level, and I wonder if you or anyone you could direct me to would be able to assist with further directions to follow in my investigative path.

I realise that this incident probably does not fall within the traditional 'light in the sky' type scenario and therefore may fall into the 'too hard basket' for some traditional researchers. Never the less I would be immensely appreciative of any advice you may be able to give me or for any new investigative paths you may be able to open for me.

Many, many thanks,

Barry Davidson

Bizarre UFO tale no worse than other Clinton stories

By Steve Wilson

Speaking with people around the country last week about UFOs and the first anniversary of the "Phoenix Lights," I was told a remarkable story that didn't make my column.

I omitted it because the account came from only one source, because it had no corroboration, and because it seemed preposterous. It simply didn't have enough credibility to be published.

But thinking it over, and reflecting on coverage of the Clinton sex scandal, I've reconsidered. The standards for what constitutes a news story have fallen so significantly in recent weeks that the UFO account can now qualify as newsworthy. Since the story involves the president, I'm even more sure it merits public disclosure.

Plus, if I don't get it in print now, Internet ace Matt Drudge might scoop me.

Here's the skinny:

The strange lights over Phoenix were only one unusual happening on the night of March 13, 1997. A U.S. reconnaissance satellite, which presumably could have picked up the source of the lights, went dead for no apparent reason. About the same time, the Pentagon increased the country's military preparedness to DEFCON 3 (the highest state of readiness for peacetime conditions).

You may recall that on the same evening, President Clinton was staying at the Florida estate of golfer Greg Norman. The White House said that after talking with Norman late into the night, Clinton tripped on a step and seriously injured his knee.

What really occurred, my source reports, is that the commander in chief was notified of the UFO activity and had to be moved quickly to a more secure location where he could oversee U.S. defense activities. In the rush by the Secret Service to hustle him away, he tripped and damaged the knee.

My source, who asked to remain anonymous, is a nationally known UFO expert. His account isn't much less reliable than multiple stories reported in recent weeks about Clinton's personal life. I'm not talking about the likes of Hard Copy or the tabloids or Drudge, the rumormonger correctly described by one critic as "the troll under the bridge of Internet journalism." I'm talking about respected mainstream media.

New Zealand's First Crop Circle - courtesy NBC-TV

At the beginning of March 1998 three 'circlemakers' (John Lundberg, Rod Dickinson and Wil Russell) were flown out to the Southern most tip of New Zealand to be filmed creating a crop circle for NBC-TV.

The footage will be used in the documentary - provisionally entitled - "Unmasked: The Secret's of Deception" that is due to be aired on prime-time TV across America during May, then around the world in the following weeks. It has an estimated US audience alone of 25 million.

We were asked to design a complex crop formation that could be made at night in under four hours. The formation we designed had over 100 flattened circles and a diameter of 300ft, putting it on a par with some of the most complex formations to appear in the fields of England over the past few years.

"So the TV commercials (they begin appearing March 23), print ads (already in some magazines' April issues) and billboards attempt a generational straddle. The 30-second spot in which seven yellow Beetles form a daisylike circle -- tagline: "Less flower. More power" -- takes a backward look while emphasizing improvements. But the commercial in which a silver Beetle bounces and flips around the white screen, followed by the line "Reverse engineered from UFOs," is intended to feel more contemporary. And ads that will appear in Wired magazine and on the Yahoo! Internet finder use simple techie shorthand: "Beetle 2.0."

Amazed scientists discover space is full of vast oceans of water

European scientists using an ultracold orbiting telescope have discovered unimaginable volumes of water in space between the stars. the discovery raises questions about life elsewhere in the universe - and provides new answers about why life was possible on Earth.

The scientists were astounded to find water vapour in the freezing atmospheres of Jupiter, Neptune, Saturn and Uranus. They also revealed yesterday that they have discovered water in the atmosphere in of Saturn's mysterious moon - Titan - which is to be visited by a joint US/Euro probe in 2004. They have even identified a cloud of water, less than a light year across, in the constellation Orion.

Hydrogen is the raw material of the universe. Oxygen is made in huge quantities by the stars. So water should be no suprise. There have been fleeting glimpses of water on the Sun's surface, and in March, American's confirmed the presence of water on the moon. But the discovery of vast oceans of water vapour - the mass of which in the Milky Way galaxy alone would equal tens of thousands of suns - by the European Space Agencies infrared space observatory ISO astonished astronomers.

"I think our imaginations failed to describe the variety of places, the variety of circumstances, and the variety of conditions under which we found it," said Paul Murdin of the British National Space Centre, yesterday.

Using instruments called spectroscopes, scientists have identified an astonishing range of organic molecules, in space, including hydrogen cyanide, alcohol and formaldehyde. But water is the first requirement for life. The 600 million ISO equipment confirms once again that there could be life on planets in other solar systems. The next step will be to look for tell-tale signs of life itself: concentrations of oxygen or ozone in distant planetary atmospheres.

The ISO discovery also confirms a growing belief that water on Earth may have been delivered by comets, icy scraps of dust left over from the birth of stars.

The experiment opens up a new window on the universe. More than 1,000 astronomers from Europe, Japan and the US have used the telescope, launched in 1995, for more than 26,000 observations. The data returned will keep astronomers busy for years.

"All the missions we undertake in ESA have to be unique," said Roger Bonnet, head of science at the space agency. "In principle, the Americans have done everything, so what remains to be done is impossible. All our missions are mission impossible, but ISO is more possible than any other."

ISO should have survived for only 18 months but is still operating after 29. The telescope posed a huge technical challenge: to detect infra-red rays, it had to be cooler than any object it looked at - and the average temperature of deep space is -270°C. So ISO had to be cooled with liquid helium which kept the instruments temperature just above absolute zero (-273°C.)

The satellite has peered into clouds of space dust to watch the formation of solar systems, and deep into the heart of ultra-luminous galaxies. It has also witnessed two galaxies colliding and, in one of them, the signature of a black hole sucking a blaze of stardust into itself. Beside mapping the edge of the known universe, it has also seen a star being born inside the Horsehead nebula.

The Lolladoff disc

Dear colleagues and friends,

Has anyone ever heard about a small disc-shaped object allegedly discovered in by a Prof. Sergey Lolladoff (Oxford University) which changes its own weight ? According to old rumours, the object, referred as "the Lolladoff disc" has engraved drawings on it and belonged to the "Dzopa" a lost tibetan tribe which is said to be originated from "star people".

I have a book in spanish which describes the object and mentions a british "Journal of Ethnology" (Oxford ?) as a solid academic reference for the discovery.

I have contacted Oxford University but they never replied about Prof. Lolladoff or the disc (which is said to be kept in a bank safe).

I would appreciate to hear your oppinion about this subject.

Sighting over Leyton in London

Could you please tell me if anyone else reported seeing a UFO in the sky over Leyton in London on Monday eve March 30 1998. My sister in law saw a round disc shape with lines all the way around and strange greenish/blue lights - no red lights. It slowly hovered across the sky above her house. She was instantly extremely frightened by the experience which confirms for her that it was a foreign object - not at all recognizable. She explained that it appeared to be quite large in size. Just wondering if anybody else has reported this to yourselves? Is there a common body that people can use to report sightings to or are you the most appropriate for this in the UK?

Fully configured MIRC irc software for you to download

We continually tell people that one of the best IRC programs available is MIRC. It is a free/shareware program (fully working) and is the 'preferred' software for use on the IRC.

Would you like to use MIRC to connect to the UK.UFO.NWs weekly Saturday meetings? Would you like to join in when we have regular special guests on the channel?

Well now you can. We have two fully configured versions of MIRC available for download for PC users. They will enable you to connect straight to the UK.UFO.NW UFO channel.

One version is for Windows 95 users. The other for Windows 3.1/3.11 users. To download go to:

<http://www.holodeck.demon.co.uk>

and select the 'Download' link from the button bar. Both programs are approximately 600Kb in size and should download fairly quickly.

Once you have downloaded the relevant file 'Run' or 'Load' it, which will install MIRC onto your harddrive.

Next load the MIRC program.

Enter your name, e-mail address and two nicknames that you wish to be known by on the channel. You only have to do this the first time you use the program. Lastly click on 'Connect to IRC server'. Once you are connected to a server a window will appear with '#ufo' inside. Click on the '#ufo' and then click on 'Join channel'.

You will now be joined to the UK.UFO.NW ufo channel. In the right hand window you will see a list (including yourself) of all those who are currently joined to the channel. The large upper left window is where you view the conversations. The small lower window is where you type anything you want to say, remembering to press 'Return' on your keyboard at the end.

The main windows within MIRC can be fully resized like most windows programs.

Don't be shy. We are all a friendly bunch. Give it a go. You'll soon get the hang of it. We'll be happy to offer any assistance that you may need.

For those of you needing help connecting to our IRC meetings send your questions to:
