Hello Scott,

I don't respond well to 'threats' Scott. If you ever wish to just 'talk' (maybe) we can communicate with each other. Until then go threaten Skippy McGurk, maybe he cares. In the meantime, don't look for any future responses from me.

>Pray tell, what is the transgression that Art Bell should "pay a >price" for?

I stated it clearly in my original. Is there a reading comprehension problem that you have that I'm not aware of? You ask me a question and then post the answer above it all in one e-mail. Amazing!

The statements I made, and all other references, are in my original. Reread it a couple of times and maybe (unless there is some problem you have translating written words into concepts and ideas) your poorly asked question will get answered there.

BTW, do you realize that by resorting to 'threats' it reveals far more about you than it ever does about me, your intended target! Kinda like aiming a rubber band hoping to hit someone else and having it snap back in ones own face. You should know that if you engage in that kind of thing often enough, your mug will soon begin to resemble the "before" picture in an acne commercial.
