On the other hand, isolated South Sea islanders do not, as far as I know, have any pieces of said 747, despite the fact that those aircraft fly over their territory all the time.

So this is something of a strawman. We don't have any evidence for terrestrial "UFOports", where we could go "on the tarmac" and touch one.

Still, Socorro and Delphos spring to mind as good physical evidence cases. As does Trans-en-Provence.

As I've stated here many times, to answer this question, one must define the discriminators for an extraterrestrial source for a UFO. In my view there are several, which include:

- 1) Cases of measured speeds at or above escape velocity.
- 2) Association of non-humans with UFOs.
- 3) Detection of UFOs in interplanetary and interstellar space.

Of these, (3) is most critical and has not yet occurred. Thus, it cannot be stated unequivocally that UFOs represent an extraterrestrially sourced phenomenon.

Nevertheless, there are many suggestive cases, and of these, there are some which have been sufficiently well-investigated and have stood the test of time to the extent that the objective researcher must conclude there is something worth scientific examination going on, and that it seems to be a physical phenomenon as well.
