Bruce,

Well, let's do get down to the crux of the matter. Since neither you nor I were in the cockpit with Arnold on that fateful day, neither of us have any idea as to how accurate, or inaccurate, he was in his perceptions. My point was simply that you and Rudiak can make any kind of calculations you want and they remain essentially meaningless in real world terms. They could well be right -- and they could well be off by who knows what exponential factor. My point was that we don't know. And for you and Rudiak to suggest otherwise -- as if the case were automatically solved in non-conventional terms -- is simply wishful thinking on both your parts.

>1) Arnold says he saw flashes of sunlight on his plane. Did he >or didn't he? What did he see?

I have no idea, since I wasn't there at the time, but neither do you. But if the objects were a good 20 miles or more away, as Arnold claimed, then I seriously doubt whether he could have discerned "flashes of sunlight on his plane." He might have seen light flashing off distant small objects, which is altogether a different thing.

<snip>

Your other questions can be addressed in similar fashion. Where was Arnold wrong in a specific instance? I don't know. Where was Arnold right in a specific instance? You don't know, and neither does David Rudiak.

I don't know. Do you? My question was, what if he was wrong?

So? How do you presume to know that he wasn't wrong on some maor points?

>If you are going to "complain" that Arnold wasn't perfect, then Sorry, Bruce, can't do. For all I know, he could have been wrong in general. A little more than a month after his original sighting, he claimed another one of small objects, 3-5 ft. in diameter, numbering a couple of dozen or more. If you or Rudiak would like to exercise your mathematical abilities on this case, you're perfectly welcome to. In fact, I wish you would.

A few years later, in 1952, Arnold claimed to have filmed two UFOs, one of which could be seen through, and which apparently led him to conclude that UFOs were living objects. Arnold would go on to claim several more sightings in his lifetime. Lucky dude, eh?

Have you seen the film Arnold claimed to have taken on this occasion? Neither have I. Odd that he didn't make it publicly and readily available, isn't it, as it would have surely proved, or at least supported, his earlier claim.

>>You, Maccabee and others can mathematically analyze Arnold's

>Not very clever remark. Sounds "whiney"

Sorry, we can't be clever 24 hours a day, can we?

>>Now explain how Miracle Man, i.e., Arnold, came to believe that >>UFOs were living organisms.

>>Troubling, isn't it?

>Perhaps, but so what?

>When the interpretation is separated from the observation >and the observation is analyzed, the witness' suggestion as to >the interpretation becomes irrelevant.

It's late here, so I'm not going to address the above statement in any detail. If you had it to do over, though, I think you would have put it differently.

>You seem to be saying that because Arnold in later years >concluded saucers were animals, that therefore one can't believe >the observational details in his first sighting.

>Sorry, I don't buy it..

Well, something of the sort, although it's not quite as straightforward as that. I simply have reservations about Arnold's first sighting that are serious enough to lead me to wonder whether or not they are worthy of the mathematical calculations you and Rudiak have devoted to same, in light of some other statements by Arnold.

Such as his second sighting, little more than a month later, and his claim of having filmed a living, transparent UFO in 1952. (See my response to Jerry Clark for additional details.) Have you ever seen this film? Wouldn't you admit that, if it exists, it would prove much more evidential than anything Arnold had to say about his earlier June, 1947, sighting?

So where is the Arnold film that would obviate anything he had to say about his 1947 sighting? Wouldn't it save you and Rudiak some serious calculus? But what if there isn't any such film?

I trust you or Rudiak will get back to us on this matter post haste. After all, why mathematically analyze Arnold's claims when you could be mathematically analyzing his film?
