Exactly. I stated this very plainly, without first having to be challenged. (Though only concerning Budd Hopkins; I don't know about other researchers).

I think I named it as a problem, but if I didn't, I've done so in the past about other missing abduction statistics, such as the percentage of abductees who have the allegedly unexplainable marks Budd so often talks about.

Give it up, John. You're not making sense. This isn't a discussion about who's less scientific, abduction researchers or skeptics. I've always said abduction research has problems. It's a discussion about whether you, John Rimmer -- when you say abduction claims have ruined lives -- know what you're talking about.
